

School of Health and Human Sciences

UNI's School of Health & Human Sciences empowers students to make a positive impact on the health and well-being of individuals, families and communities in Iowa and beyond. Programs within the school help prepare tomorrow's health and human science professionals for high-demand careers by offering community-centered and hands-on learning opportunities within state-of-the-art facilities and through dedicated field experiences. A collaborative advising model ensures students interested in health-focused majors and pre-professional tracks are supported every step of the way.

Departments within the school include Family, Aging & Counseling; Kinesiology & Athletic Training; Nursing & Public Health; and Social Work.
